

Joy Moses

Director, Homelessness Research Institute National Alliance to End Homelessness

Joy Moses is the Director of the Homelessness Research Institute at the National Alliance to End Homelessness. For over 20 years, she has worked to reduce poverty and advance racial justice via public policy. She has extensively published on these topics, including various white papers and articles. Before joining the Alliance, she was a private consultant and analyst with the Center for American Progress. Within those roles, she managed projects and developed research reports and other forms of analysis. Joy began her career as a legal advocate. She represented the interests of children and youth through her work at the National Law Center on Homelessness & Poverty and the NAACP Legal Defense Fund.

She is a graduate of Georgetown University Law Center and Stanford University.
